Some seed supplies will probably be in short supply this spring. Red clover seed production is off 32% and tall fescue is expected to be in tight supply.

Kenstar Red Clover supply will be up but not enough to meet demands. Kenstar is a high yielding Red Clover variety that has shown more persistance in Virginia tests.

Ladino white clover is expected to be a little lower in price, but Tillman (an improved Ladino type) white clover is supposed to be in short supply.

Alfalfa seed supplies are expected to be somewhat improved over last season, yet the better varieties will be tight.

Plan now and get your 1978 seed supplies committed.

In recent weeks there have been several questions asked about onions. Elsewhere in this week's paper, there is an onion story that came to our attention.

There's still more to be said about onions. The following may provide added knowledge about this delightful vegetable.

Bunching Onions: These are onions which do not make a bulb, but make long slim "scallions." There's a white Spanish bunching type and White Portugal, ideal for bunching. Make excellent pickling onions, snow-white and very firm. White Ebenezer sets are good for bunching, and make fine little onions early; if allowed to mature, produce flattened bulbs in midsummer.

Multiplier Onions: These are hardy perennials planted in fall for early green onions. They are grown from top sets, sets that develop on top of plant in July. May also be grown from divisions of clumps that develop.

Small bulbs of Yellow Multipliers (potato onions) grow into large ones which break up into smaller onions and thus are propagated. Small bulbs O. K. pickling. Onions are hardy and can be left in ground during winter, but it's better to take up when mature and separate and reset 3 to 4 inches apart in spring. Multiplier onions are sometimes erroneously referred to as "shallots" (which see).

Perennial or "Tree" or "Top" Onion [Egyptian]: This is a common winter onion on which clusters of small onions (bulblets) are produced on top of the onion stalk. Grown for green onions and more common than multipliers. May be set in late summer, fall, or spring.

Shallots: Related to onions, perennial, seldom produce seed. Here's a little-used vegetable with a delicate flavor. Ideal for flavoring muschroons, salads, scrambled eggs. This onion is started from sets planted in spring. Shallots mature in September, when they are harvested and stored in a cool, dry place. Good keepers and will last until the new shallots are mature the following spring. Small bulbs are compound and grow and break up into smaller ones. These small bulbs are the sets used for planting.

Leeks: Look like green onions, except leaves are flat, plants are thicker, and do not form bulbs. Use for flavoring, or boil and serve with white sauce. Grow from seed sown 2 inches deep in a trench. Thin to 3 inches apart in row. As they grow, hill soil around stems to blanch them. Seed can be sown indoors in March and plants set in garden in April for early crop.

Non-edible Onions-Ornamental Only: The Pregnant onion (sea onion) and the alliums are not edible. You grow these like you do regular onions (Sea onions is not hardy, but alliums are.) Sea onions is used for poultice, burns, etc., but alliums have large flowring heads florist use in decorative arrangements.

THEN and NOW!

Down The Road A Piece

The empty spot across from C. T. Evans Store in the village of Evergreen was not always empty. Back in the days of THEN, a Norfolk and Western Railroad Station was located there as we see by the photo above.

By Frances H. Paulette

A long time ago, in the days of THEN, the various communities located here and there in our County of Appomattox were more than rural communities. They were villages.

These self-subsistent villages offered a good life-style and the people both enjoyed and appreciated it. This, of course, was before the age of automation literally shoved the horse and buggy off the road and sent the people scurrying (in their newly acquired cars, of course!) to the cities. Let's look at just such a community.

Evergreen, Virginia, located approximately five miles east of the town of Appomattox was not always known as Evergreen. The first post office was established on Feb. 18, 1854 with Frederick Boatwright as Postmaster; the name of the Post Office? LEGS!

With not a single person willing to even hazard a guess as to why or how the village got the name of Legs, we can let our imagination run wild! Evidently the name Legs was not too popular or it was considered to be lacking in dignity for a community that boasted its own Post Office, for the name was short lived.

On June 30, 1854 the name Legs was changed to Evergreen and the community has kept the name for all these years. Here again, we don't know exactly why the community was given the name Evergreen. It is believed by some to have been given this name because of the surrounding fields of Evergreen trees.

Since Postmaster Boatwright was named to the position in 1854, there have been seven other Postmasters who have served the village of Evergreen, excluding the present Postmaster, John Kent Hamilton who accepted the position in April 1942 . . . on April Fool's Day, to be exact!

Following Boatwright there was James Newman, Samuel Miller, William B. Farrar, Miss Mary Gilliam, John W. Snell, James H. Cheatham, and J. R. Hamilton, father of the current postmaster, J. K. Hamilton.

So the village of Evergreen had a post office in the days of THEN . . . so what, they have one now, you may say. But wait, they had more, much more, back then.

According to a copy of the Lynchburg and Surrounding Area Directory, dated 1881-1882 the village of Evergreen was quite a place to live! With an official population listing of 60, there were business and professional men to meet almost every need.

For the couple seeking someone to quickly "tie the knot", there was W. H. Abbott, the Justice of The Peace; he would eagerly oblige. There was only one problem - - - he might be otherwise engaged. He could be busy delivering a baby or easing the pains of gout; in addition to serving as Justice of the Peace, he was the local physician. I would say he had a busy life, don't you agree?

With John W. Snell as Postmaster, and R. F. Burke as railroad agent, the village of Evergreen, in the early 1880's was in capable hands. If you had happened to come to Evergreen for a few days on business and needed a place to stay, F. B. Thornton, who operated a boarding house would have been happy to have you as guest.

NOW, the homemakers of Evergreen have two stores, J. K. Hamilton's and the store of C. T. Evans to meet their needs. In the days of THEN, there were also two stores, James T. Ferguson, General Mdse., and W. A. Glover, General Mdse. They offered everything from muslin to peppermint sticks.

If the family needed shoes, there was also a choice. Henry Brown and Ralph Young were both shoemakers in Evergreen in 1881-1882. When the flour barrel began to get empty the man of the family would go either to Prior Woodson, Miller or to P. G. Wingfield, miller to fill it up again. Never did they have to venture out of the village to get their bread!

Should the horse throw a shoe, James Baker, blacksmith, would come to the rescue. He operated the only blacksmith shop during this period, I believe. If the problem was more serious, and a wheel came off the buggy or a new one was needed, then Edward E. Chism was the one to see, for he was the village Wheelwright.

According to what I have been told and have read, people generally lived at peace with their neighbors and seldom needed the services of a lawyer, except to write a will or complete a deed. When one did require the help of a lawyer, Evergreen had one . . . J. F. L. Fleshman was the one to see.

The Southside Railroad came to Evergreen at about the same time as the Post Office, 1854. For many years there was only a single track running through the village of Evergreen: with progress, there came change. In 1913 the railroad paid Mr. Jim Hamilton, Postmaster, and operator of a General Mdse. store, the sum of $3,000.00 to move his store back to accomodate the double tracks that were being laid.

According to Mrs. John Kent Hamilton, daughter-in-law of the late Jim Hamilton, when the move took place, business continued as usual. There wasn't a single break or spill to interrupt the store's operation.

Yes, Evergreen was quite an up-to-date village in the days of THEN - - - even had soft drinks! According to records, in 1919, the late James Hamilton postmaster and general store operator, acquired such a license from the late Claude Smith, then clerk of Appomattox County. You see, he wanted to be sure his customers had everything!

Evergreen is indeed proud of her churches, the Evergreen United Memorial Methodist Church, organized in 1906 and the Evergreen Baptist Church organized a year later, in 1907. For many years there was a Presbyterian Church in Evergreen also but has been disbanded for quite a long time.

Evergreen had a school too, back THEN - - - a good school. In 1907 the School Board appointed the late Mrs. Bertha Martin, then Miss Bertha Wooldridge as teacher of the elementary school in Evergreen.

How would you like to hear more about that school, and maybe just what became of the nine stores that were in Evergreen at one time? Then, come with me again, if you will, down the road a piece. I hope you can make it.

County Farmers Ask ed To Help In Farm Survey

A national agricultural survey will kick off in late November and early December to determine how many acres farmers planted to 1978 winter wheat and what the latest facts are on livestock and poultry numbers.

Appomattox county producers will be asked to cooperate in this undertaking. Participation is voluntary but very essential to reliable final estimates, according to Vanessa Venable representing the Virginia Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. She noted that all information provided by producers during the personal interviews will be kept confidential and used only in State and national summaries.

Estimates of winter wheat acreages, along with a production forecast, will be published December 22 by the U. S. Department of Agriculture as the first indicaiton of how producers in Virginia and nationally have responded to the new farm program involving acrage set-aside provisions. Estimates of hog numbers and the early 1978 pig crop also will be published on December 22, and the count of chickens and cattle will be ready to go January 30, 1978.

The estimates will provide producers and others in agriculture with the necessary background information to make decisions affecting production and marketing operations.

Vanessa Venable points out that copies of these reports will be available from the Virginia Crop and Livestock Reporting Service office at 203 N. Governor St., Richmond, VA 23219.

Secretary Bergland Says Wheat Farmers Get $1.2 Billion: - Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland has said an estimated $1.2 billion in 1977 crop deficiency payments will be paid to U. S. Wheat producers.

Secretary Bergland estimates payments will be 65 cents per bushel for wheat planted within the allotment acres established for the farm on an historical basis. If the full allotment was not planted, 22 cents per bushel will be paid for the balance.

"This will have a substantial and beneficial impact on the farm economy in these wheat-producing states," Secretary Bergland said. "It will go a long way in relieving the tight credit crunch for farmers and rural lending institutions as plans are being made for next spring's work."

Secretary Bergland pointed out that the new farm legislation provides a distinct advantage over the old programs in that payments next year will be based on acres planted by the farmer and not on an arbitrary historical allotment for each farmer.

The deficiency payment rate is calculated on the difference between the established price of wheat and the higher of either the national average loan rate of $2.25 a bushel or the national weighted average market price received by farmers from June through October.

Under the new farm act, Mr. Berland noted, deficiency payments for the 1977 wheat crop are computed in two steps; multiplying the appropriate payment rate by the planted or underplanted wheat acres by the projected yield established for each farm.

"Based on this formula, we have arrived at the $1.2 billion figure for total deficiency payments," Bergland said.

The payments will go to an estimated two million producers. Kansas, the largest wheat producing state, will receive about one-fourth of the total or around $255.3 million. North Dakota, the largest spring wheat state, will get about $155.8 million and Nebraska farmers will receive $122.9 million, Mr. Bergland said.

Reminder - Each farmer in the county needs to make a report of crops grown in 1977 including small grain, corn, soybeans, hay, pasture, etc. by December 1, 1977. If you have not reported your acreage, please contact the ASCS office and make the report.
